

Abolish the N-Word Transcript

KF: I personally, I have to admit, I used to say it. It wasn't until I listened to Lisa Evers on Hot 97.

JF: We were in the car, myself and Kovon. And we were listening to this. Their were kids calling in and you could tell that they were White kids, Spanish kids, Chinese. And they were all like, "It's not the same word, I use it to call my friend, I say Hey what's up?" It's not a big deal and they don't understand what all the talk is about. We felt like at that moment, they don't get it, they don't understand where this word came from.

KF: I said to myself as well as Jill, "Is it that serious?" The next day it was like on the outside looking in. we just hear everybody saying it like every five minutes, like "n-this, n-that", and I said, "Wow, ok." I saw the majority was kids and teenagers.

JF: No, it should be abolished, we should just kill it. We thought we would get t-shirts and have our own little movement going on. As we talked about some more we thought let's just put up some history and see where the word came from, why so many people died in the use of this word. Let's put up on a site and let's send it out. We came right in the house and got the domain name, and this was forty minutes after listening to the local radio show.
